Under the umbrella of the “history as a project,” this second session of the DASP Lunch Seminar 2022 will delve around three keywords: Scales, Documents, and Competitions. These will be the axis through which the three doctoral theses of this session will be presented.

In this way, this session will discuss how the scale of case studies determines the research methodologies, the role of documents within the research on architectural histories, and the place that architecture competitions have in history at large.

Considering that the three interlocutors are in different stages of their research, the presentation will follow an in crescendo progression to add up topics and aspects to feed the audience and prompt an open discussion between the speakers and the college and participants.
